The relationship between cultural, legal and constitutional pluralism in Europe is analysed from a Law and Society perspective. Multiculturalism in Europe, linked to sociologically complex societies, ethnic diversity and nationalisms, is increasingly the result of immigration and religious diversity. Diversity of lifestyles, beliefs, mores, ... and of social norms considered 'legal'. State law and official reaction to diversity are essential in 'legal pluralism' but transnational and global legal phenomena originate new pluralisms.

It was clearly stated with reference to the Basque language in the Glosses of San Millán de la Cogolla and in the Registers of the monasteries of Leire and Irache. The solemn declaration of the Navarre Romance language as the official language of the Kingdom of Navarre took place in 1350 and 1390 as a result of the coronation of Kings Charles II and Charles III of Navarre.
